Bob usually got into mischief at lunch; however, he decided to visit the library today. He took out some thick books off the shelf. His General Studies and English teachers were watching him. They were suspicious but also happy because they thought Bob was finally going to read some books during lunch. Before leaving the library, Bob went to the check-out counter to check out his books.

Bob took the books to the playground and put them on the ground. He stacked them all up and stepped on them so he could reach the cherries on the tree.

When Bob had a bunch of cherries in his hands, Mr George, the headmaster, saw him on the stack of books. He ran to Bob and told him to come back down. Mr George grabbed Bob by the arm and took him back to the library because he didn't want Bob to escape.

After returning the books, Bob had to write a hundred times, "I wouldn't be michievous anymore." This was his punishment.
