Author: Jane Law

Illustrated by: Loy Yeuk Hei

One day, Bill and Joe walked past a jewellery shop. There were watches, rings, bracelets and many other jewellery. They both admired the jewellery in the shop.

Suddenly, a man walked up to the window. The man was very suspicious and unfriendly. The man took a brick and broke the window of the jewellery shop. When Bill and Joe saw this, they chased the man, jumped on him, hit and kicked him and even pulled his hair. There were many other people in the street. Instead of helping the boys, they crossed their arms and laughed.

Just then a “policeman” came along. He pointed to a camera and a sighing director and told the boys that the thief and the other people on the street were actors and they were just creating a film. Bill and Joe felt embarrassed and a bit guilty. Then the director shouted cut! Bill and Joe apologized to everyone in the film, because they have spoiled the film. When they got home, their parents praised them for being little policemen and dared them to be policemen when they grow up.
